Message from the Guest Editors

Dear Colleagues,

This Special Issue aims to build on the exchange of knowledge generated by comparative research on urban development. It intends to bring together scholarly work on the design of comparative research, its possibilities and limitations. As the scope of comparisons can extend to a large array of topics, we narrow it down to the way urban development responds to crises. We invite articles on a broad range of topics on both theoretical work regarding comparative formats and also in terms of results of comparative cases of urban development in times of crisis.
